

Island of Sand: The Software Killings

The owner of an antivirus software company becomes disgruntled with his government and plots to kill a million people on New Years eve in revenge. But then while smoking opium in a hammock, he becomes trapped in his mind and feels like he is in a bottle of honey and God comes to him and the programmer asks many questions. He is told the devil is real and fighting a war and that a million dead is not enough and he learns of Plan B - a plan built into creation to ensure, should the sum of good and evil come to favor evil, the world will self-destruct. God instructs the engineer to create a plan that will save the world, but it involves the killing of three billion and the programmer isnt sure he can carry it out. He is going to give away modems for free that at midnight on New Years Eve, will overheat, releasing deadly cyanide gas. He has included a switch to enable him to cancel the plan but when New Years arrives and midnight grows near, and he decides to cancel the software killings, he realizes that a terrorist organization or maybe even, he thinks, the devil, has reprogrammed his software, removing the switch he had placed within it. At midnight he hears a child scream and watches on his webcam as a child is begging for help. He can not go through with it and reaches to turn of the plot but finds he cannot... he is in a bungalow on a beach in Thailand and the next morning at five am, he opens the door of the hut only to see bodies scattered about... he had smoked a lot marijuana the previous evening and is not exactly clear as to what has happened... did he allow the plan to proceed?
